On a beautiful Sunday last August I arrived home to a message that there was flooding at a home in my district. I arrived at the home to see many people helping move things out of the basement. Some had left church and were still in their good clothes. Even Mayor Cullimore was there. Indeed, there was not only an emergency, but a disaster for the family. We discovered that this problem was many years old and affected many homes. The problem was attributable to high water tables and a canal that was running full behind the homes. The mayor got on the phone and intervened on behalf of the citizens with Salt Lake City Public Utilities. That process begun last summer is now headed to a permanent resolution. This is just an example of a small scale emergency. When these types of emergencies arise they are disruptive and often devastating to those affected.

We have discussed our successes in Cottonwood Heights during this first year, but there is still so much to be done. One of our goals for the immediate future is to prepare for emergencies and disasters.

EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS

During the high runoff last spring we worked closely with the county on monitoring stream flows along the creeks. A tremendous amount of water came down and came very close to flood stage within our city. In fact, Little Cottonwood Creek did flood a few times, but it was down stream in an area that was designed for it.

The city, as well as individual citizens, must be prepared for any disaster from localized flooding to earthquakes. To that end, we have organized a Citizen's Emergency Planning Committee. This committee is working diligently on emergency preparedness plans for our city. As a city, we must do all we can before we turn to county, state or federal resources for assistance.

We were pleased that a major part of this task is already in place with the County Emergency Operations Center. We have an expert representative assigned to Cottonwood Heights who is working with our citizens committee to develop our own Emergency Management Plan. The county EOC is set up for responding to localized needs as well as the entire county. They have a large modern well staffed center capable of serving as a communications and coordination center in the event of a disaster.

It is our intent to be as ready as possible for any emergency. The plan we are developing will be consistent with the County, State and Federal Response Plans. It will include: 1) Mitigation to reduce or eliminate the effects of hazards. 2) Preparedness to get us ready for hazards. 3) Response to the effects of hazards, and 4) Recovery to return our city to a healthy, viable, and economically sustainable environment after the disaster.

As individuals and families we must do the things we know should be done to prepare for emergencies. We wanted you to know that the city is working on an emergency preparedness plan as well.
